He comes out of the kitchen naked. We instantly start kissing. We're both naked as we dance around the living room.. I start to kiss him again and pull his hand down the front of my pants. Some of us just don't get along. This phenomenon is known as relationship discord. It is a subcategory of relationship conflict. We don't get along because we have different personalities. We are not attracted to one another. Or the relationship is not one of deep friendship. Or the expectations of the partner are too high, or too low. There are many reasons. One of the most common is that we all have our own unique personalities. We all have individual ways of working on our relationships. You just don't get along with someone else's unique ways. You may be attracted to someone's personality. You may not. You may think they are too nice. They may think you are too nice. Relationship discord is not so much a conflict of personalities as it is a conflict of expectations. This means that you have expectations about what your partner will be like and what your partner is like. You may be hoping that you'll have a relationship that is closer to what you had with your family growing up. But your partner may be hoping that your relationship will be different. They may not have had a wonderful family. They may be looking for a different kind of relationship. You may be very frustrated with your partner. But your partner may not even be interested in relationships. They may be looking for a good friend, someone who is on their own terms. This is why it is so important to communicate your expectations. You need to talk about what you want from your relationship. Are you looking for stability? Are you looking for conflict? Are you looking for excitement? Are you looking for closeness? Are you looking for someone who you can learn from? Are you looking for someone to share your life with? Are you looking for someone who is in it for the long run? Are you looking for someone who knows what they want? Are you looking for someone to help you with your problems? Are you looking for someone who can communicate? Are you looking for someone who can laugh at your bad jokes? Are you looking for someone who loves you more than your friends? Are you looking for someone who loves you more than anything else? This is part of the secret. The secret to a great relationship is communication. You need to talk 82157476af
